Juan is a vertebrate paleontologist and functional anatomist. She studies fossil fish and has been excavating fossils from North America and Asia.

Her contributions to evolutionary biology include describing new species and recognizing hidden biodiversity in the history of Earth. She uses comparative and computational functional anatomy methods to understand the mechanism of hearing and estimate the hearing capability of extinct creatures.